CHAPTER 1 – INTRODUCTION

1.1 About the Short Film

“NERAM” is a short emotional film that focuses on the relationship between a caring mother and her son. The story presents a simple situation that can occur in everyday life. The son is a college student who is not very serious about his studies and spends most of his time with his friends. His mother is innocent, caring, and slightly timid in nature. She regularly calls and messages him to check whether he has eaten, reached college, and is safe.

The son, however, considers her repeated calls to be unimportant. He rejects her calls, ignores her messages, and tells her that he is busy even when he is actually spending time with his friends. The film gradually shows how these small acts of neglect can become meaningful later.

The original script also establishes the mother’s repeated attempts to communicate through calls and messages and the son's tendency to postpone responding.

1.2 Aim and Objectives

The main aim of the short film is to convey the importance of valuing the time and communication we have with our loved ones.

The objectives are:

- To present a realistic mother-son relationship.
- To show how people often ignore calls from their loved ones because of busy or casual activities.
- To create an emotional connection with the audience through a simple storyline.
- To use visuals, editing, music and sound effects to strengthen the emotions.
- To develop practical skills in short-film production and video editing.
- To create the title and selected visual elements using Adobe After Effects.
- To edit and arrange the complete film using Adobe Premiere Pro.

1.3 Theme and Concept

The central theme of “NERAM” is time, communication and regret. The film shows that a phone call from a loved one may appear ordinary at the moment, but its importance may only be understood later.

The story uses everyday situations such as getting ready for college, walking with friends, receiving phone calls, reading messages and spending time with friends. These ordinary moments are used to gradually build the emotional impact of the ending.

1.4 Film Concept

The film follows the son's activities during a normal college day. His mother attempts to contact him several times, but he repeatedly postpones speaking with her. The contrast between the mother's concern and the son's casual attitude forms the main emotional element of the film.

The film finally uses a black-screen transition and title/message presentation to leave the audience with the central idea: some calls may not come twice.

CHAPTER 2 – STORY AND SCRIPT

2.1 Story Overview

The short film “NERAM” revolves around a college student and his mother. The son is a casual and somewhat irresponsible student who gives more importance to spending time with his friends than responding to his mother. In contrast, the mother is caring, innocent and concerned about her son’s well-being.

The story begins with the son getting ready to go to college. His mother calls him and asks about food and his college routine. Although she wants to talk to him, he tells her that he is getting late and ends the conversation.

During the day, the mother continues trying to contact him. He rejects or ignores her calls and messages while spending time with his friends. His friends notice the calls, but the son treats them casually.

The repeated calls and messages gradually establish the mother's concern and the son's habit of postponing communication. This forms the emotional foundation of the film.

2.2 Characters

Son:

The main character of the film. He is a college student who is not very serious about his studies and enjoys spending time with his friends. He does care about his mother, but he repeatedly postpones talking to her.

Mother:

She is an innocent, timid and caring character. Her concern is expressed mainly through phone calls and messages. Her simple questions show her affection for her son.

Friends:

The friends appear in the college portions of the film. They provide the casual college environment and also notice the mother's repeated calls.

2.3 Scene Description

The story is presented through simple everyday scenes such as:

- Son getting ready for college.
- Mother calling him.
- Son travelling/walking around college.
- Son spending time with friends.
- Mother sending messages.
- Son ignoring or postponing her calls.
- Final emotional sequence.

- Black-screen ending with the title/message.

2.4 Dialogue and Communication

Phone calls and text messages are important storytelling elements in the film. Instead of showing long conversations between the mother and son, the film uses short dialogues, call notifications and messages to establish their relationship.

For example, the mother's repeated concern about whether her son has eaten and reached college is used to show her caring nature.

The son's repeated responses such as “I'll call her later” represent his habit of postponing communication.

CHAPTER 3 – PRE-PRODUCTION

3.1 Planning

The pre-production stage was carried out to organize the story, characters, locations, shots and other requirements before filming. The main focus was to present the emotional relationship between the son and mother in a simple and realistic manner.

The story was first developed around the idea of a son repeatedly ignoring his mother's calls and messages. The scenes were then arranged in a sequence showing his normal college activities and his gradual realization of the importance of her calls.

3.2 Script Preparation

The script was prepared with short scenes and simple dialogues so that the story could be communicated naturally within the short duration of the film.

The major situations planned for filming included:

- Son getting ready for college.
- Mother calling the son.
- Son going to college.
- Son spending time with his friends.
- Mother sending messages.
- Son ignoring or postponing her calls.
- The final emotional sequence.
- Black-screen ending and title presentation.

The original script uses separate morning, college, canteen, evening and night situations to establish the progression of the story.

3.3 Cast and Character Planning

The short film uses only two on-screen actors, keeping the production simple and focused on the main storyline.

- Son – Main Character: The central character of the film. He is a college student who spends time with his friend and repeatedly ignores or postpones his mother's calls and messages.
- Friend – Supporting Character: The friend's role is limited to approximately 30–40 seconds. He appears in the college portions and interacts briefly with the son.

The mother does not appear directly on screen. Her presence is communicated through mobile-phone calls, text messages and related sound elements. This approach helps maintain the focus on the son's reactions while allowing the mother's caring nature to be conveyed through communication. The script similarly uses the mother's calls and messages as an important storytelling device.

This limited cast also made the production easier to manage while keeping the film centered on its main emotional idea.

3.4 Location and Props

The locations were selected based on the requirements of the scenes. The film mainly uses a college environment.

Important props used in the film include:

- Mobile phone
- College bag
- Books/college materials
- Table and other elements
- Other normal college-use objects

The mobile phone is especially important because calls, messages and notifications are used as major storytelling elements.

3.5 Shot Planning

The shots were planned to clearly show the characters' actions and reactions. Close shots can be used for the mobile phone, calls and messages, while wider shots establish the college environment and interaction between the son and his friends.

The emotional portions require more attention to facial expressions and pauses, while the college portions can use comparatively active shots to represent the son's casual routine.

CHAPTER 4 – PRODUCTION

4.1 Filming Process

The production stage involved recording the scenes planned during the pre-production stage for the short film “NERAM.” The film was shot mainly within the college campus to create a natural and realistic college environment.

The major filming locations were the college pathways, the area near the college mart, and the stone benches. These locations were selected because they naturally suited the college-life situations shown in the story.

The filming was kept simple and practical. The scenes were recorded according to the planned sequence, with attention given to the actions of the son, his interactions with his friend, and his reactions to the calls and messages from his mother.

The film uses only two on-screen actors. The son is the main character, while the friend appears only briefly for approximately 30–40 seconds. The mother does not appear directly on screen; her presence is conveyed through the son's phone, calls, messages and notifications. This approach keeps the focus on the son's behaviour and reactions.

The mobile phone is an important prop throughout the production because the mother's communication forms a major part of the story. The script also uses repeated calls and messages to show the mother's concern for her son.

4.2 Camera and Framing

The entire short film was recorded using a Realme Narzo 70 Pro smartphone. The smartphone was used as the primary camera for capturing all the required footage.

Since the film was shot in different areas of the college campus, using a smartphone provided flexibility and made it easier to move between the pathways, mart area and stone benches.

Different framing was used depending on the purpose of the scene. Wider shots were used to show the college environment and establish the location, while closer shots were used when the focus was on the son, his expressions, his friend, or the mobile phone.

The mobile phone required particular attention because the calls, messages and notifications are important storytelling elements. The framing was therefore planned so that the audience could understand when the son receives or ignores communication from his mother.

The camera work was kept simple and focused on clear composition, natural movement and realistic presentation rather than complex cinematic camera techniques.

4.3 Acting and Direction

The acting and direction were designed to maintain a natural college-life atmosphere. The son was directed to behave casually and show that he gives more importance to his activities and friends than to responding immediately to his mother.

His reactions to the phone calls and messages were important for communicating the central idea of the film. Instead of relying on lengthy dialogue, his expressions, actions and phone interactions were used to show his attitude.

The friend has a small supporting role and appears for approximately 30–40 seconds. His interaction with the son helps establish the college setting and the son's casual social environment.

The mother is not physically shown in the film. Her character is communicated through her phone calls, messages and notifications. This was used as a storytelling technique to make the audience understand her caring nature without requiring an additional on-screen actor.

Overall, the direction focused on simple acting, natural locations and realistic interactions so that the emotional message of NERAM could be communicated effectively.

CHAPTER 5 – POST-PRODUCTION

5.1 Video Editing

The post-production stage was used to assemble the recorded footage into the final short film “NERAM.” The main editing work was carried out using Adobe Premiere Pro.

The recorded clips were first arranged according to the storyline. Unwanted portions were removed, and the required shots were placed in the correct sequence. The timing of each shot was adjusted to maintain a smooth flow and to keep the film within the planned short duration.

The editing process also included arranging the dialogue, phone interactions, sound effects and background music according to the scenes.

5.2 Adobe Premiere Pro

Adobe Premiere Pro was the primary software used for editing the short film. It was used for:

- Importing and organizing the recorded video clips.
- Cutting and trimming unwanted footage.
- Arranging scenes in the correct order.
- Adjusting the duration of individual shots.
- Synchronizing video with audio.
- Adding sound effects.
- Adding background music.
- Creating transitions between scenes.
- Finalizing the complete video sequence.

The Premiere Pro timeline was used to combine the video, dialogue, sound effects and music into a single continuous film.

5.3 Adobe After Effects

Adobe After Effects was mainly used for the title creation and title-related visual work.

After Effects provided the required tools to create and animate the film title “NERAM.” The title was designed to match the emotional tone of the film and was integrated into the final sequence.

The use of After Effects allowed the title to have a more polished appearance compared with a simple static text layer.

5.4 Title Creation

The title “NERAM” was created as an important visual element of the film. The title was designed and processed using Adobe After Effects and then incorporated into the edited film.

The title appears in connection with the final emotional portion of the film. The ending uses a black screen, creating a pause before the final title/message appears. This helps emphasize the central idea of the story.

5.5 Sound Effects and Music

Sound design was an important part of the post-production process. Different sound effects were added to make the scenes feel more natural and to emphasize important actions.

The sound effects used included:

- Phone call sounds
- Message notification sounds
- Walking sounds
- Bag-throwing sound
- Other suitable movement and environmental sound effects

Background music was also added to support the emotional flow of the film. Radhima BGM and portions of three movie songs were used at suitable points in the film.

The music was arranged according to the mood of the scenes so that it supported the storytelling without distracting from the visuals.

5.6 Final Editing and Export

After completing the video editing, title creation, sound effects and background music, the complete sequence was reviewed to check the timing and continuity.

The final output was then prepared as a complete short film. The main objective of the post-production stage was to combine all the individual elements—video, title, sound effects, dialogue and music—into a single coherent presentation of NERAM.

CHAPTER 6 – RESULT AND CONCLUSION

6.1 Final Output

The final output of the project is a 3–4 minute emotional short film titled “NERAM.” The completed film combines the recorded footage with video editing, sound effects, background music and title animation.

The film presents the relationship between a caring mother and her son through simple everyday situations. The mother's presence is mainly communicated through phone calls and messages, while the son's actions and reactions show the progression of the story.

The film was shot using a Realme Narzo 70 Pro and primarily edited using Adobe Premiere Pro. Adobe After Effects was used for creating the film title.

6.2 Challenges and Solutions

Several practical challenges were faced during the making of the short film.

Limited Cast: Only two actors were used in the film. The son is the main character, while the friend has a short appearance of approximately 30–40 seconds. The story was therefore designed to focus mainly on the son's actions.

Location Limitations: The film was shot within the college campus. Locations such as the college pathways, area near the college mart and stone benches were selected according to the requirements of the scenes.

Mother Not Appearing On Screen: The mother does not appear directly in the film. Her character is represented through phone calls, messages and notifications. This required the phone interactions to be clearly presented during editing.

Sound and Editing: Different sound effects and background music had to be synchronized with the video. Adobe Premiere Pro was used to arrange the footage, music and sound effects into the final sequence.

6.3 Conclusion

The short film “NERAM” was successfully developed as a 3–4 minute emotional film focusing on the importance of giving time to loved ones.

The project provided practical experience in story development, filming, acting, direction, video editing, sound design and title creation. The film was recorded using a Realme Narzo 70 Pro, edited primarily using Adobe Premiere Pro, and the title was created using Adobe After Effects.

Through a simple story, limited cast and realistic college locations, the film communicates the importance of not continuously postponing communication with people who care about us. The final black-screen and title sequence gives the audience a moment to reflect on the message of the film.
